

Government studies have demonstrated that the higher minimum altitude saves lives; constant noise has been shown to adversely impact human health; Hawaii's wildlife--especially forest birds--are negatively affected by overflight disruptions, from mating problems to abandonment of nests; constant noise in state and national parks can ruin the wilderness experience for hikers and campers;
the state and National Park Service should have the ability to restrict or ban air tour flights over sensitive areas.